			The proposed Baltimore City Opportunity Zone area contains forty-one census tracts. Tract eligibility was assessed using maps developed by Enterprise Community Partners, PolicyMap and the U.S. Treasury. Based on these maps, it was concluded that some one hundred and sixty-eight of Baltimore's two hundred tracts meet Opportunity Zone eligibility standards. These one hundred and sixty-eight tracts account for 28% of the six hundred tracts that are apparently Opportunity Zone eligible in the State of Maryland. Under Opportunity Zone requirements, up to one-quarter of all state eligible tracts can be part of the Program. For Maryland this would be one hundred and fifty tracts. The forty-one tracts that Baltimore City has proposed account for just-under 28% of all tracts that could be eligible for the Opportunity Zone Program. Two of the forty-one tracts qualified under contiguity standards.
